My own Darling One -

It was good to hear your voice and to know you got in in 4 hrs.
What awful weather you had - Joan took Penna out - had a little sunshine & then dull. I got a sleep & Gillian slept till 3-30 p.m.
Then we moved the rooms - and here are diagrams.

We have now a lovely bright room - the dark furniture being moved & Children's things brought in seems to brighten it even more - I shall be very happy with the thought of the Children in this room.

The back room with the dark oak furniture is quite a nice dignified little room. It is quite a nice little retreat for me if I want to escape the children in the daytime - either for morning work at my desk - or tea in the easy chair ^{with} the little oak table.

In the evening I can lie back on my couch in the front room which Joan will make tidy for me while I put Gillian to bed.

In the afternoon also I can lie on my couch near Penma in her pen without the fuss of setting up the pen or waiting for Joan to clear the table which she can do at her leisure. We shall have breakfast in the front room - Penma in her Pen & Gillian & me at the low table - Dinner in state in the dining room with the electric fire -

It will be interesting to see how it works out.

That little dining room will make a delightful room for the girls when they are bigger. I expect by then they will want to use most of the shelves for books and each have a cupboard for their things. They could do their lessons or play games round the dining table - and Gillian's desk be substituted for mine.

Gillian's doll's house with the map of the world over it looks very well in the front room where the dress used to stand. I've changed the ornaments of the two rooms - but not the pictures -

I'm tired now - as I expect you are
- it is 8.30 p.m. - but I'll try and post this before 9 a.m. - in the hopes that you will get it before Sunday - My darling one - I only wish I could have given you a better holiday this time - but it has been a difficult autumn. The children seem gloriously fit now - and I'll keep on with the cod-liver oil. which I'm sure helps. Also they shall have all the sunshine & fresh air I can give them - and we'll pull through the winter in fine form.

I do hope your affairs will straighten out soon. Oh I'm so glad your lovely little home is complete now and that you have Mrs Stevens to take care of you. Eat well, darling, you simply mustn't get so thin again.

All my love - and God keep you - I'll gladly come to you whenever you wish - Yours ever Ada.
